今日速读 / TODAY'S BRIEF

今日主线是以谷歌为首的大型 AI 产品与企业动态，OpenAI 发布 GPT-6.2 Astra 与 Sol，以更低 token 成本和更高准确率巩固其领先地位，并通过与 Cursor 等生态合作加速落地；Meta 则通过收购 Manus 进入 AI Agent 赛道，与谷歌、OpenAI 形成竞争。同时，英伟达宣布将于 2026 年下半年量产 Rubin 平台，进一步巩固其在 AI 基础设施领域的垄断地位。

The main thread today is the leap in frontier model capability and accelerated productization: OpenAI released GPT-6.2 Astra and Sol, reinforcing its flagship and lightweight lines with lower token costs and higher benchmark performance, and quickly spun off vertical products for law and sales; Google made its Android Bench leaderboard public, positioning the assistant from conversation toward an executable personal agent. Meanwhile, AI governance and geopolitical signals are dense: OpenAI's external safety evaluation was criticized as lacking independence, the U.S. DOJ and Commerce Department are investigating Megaspeed amid chip export reviews related to China, and OpenAI's cooperation with NATO and European cybersecurity agencies shows frontier models being incorporated into official defense systems. On the industry side, Nvidia's Rubin platform entered mass production, Arm sees high-double-digit growth in the CPU's departure remote unclear, Nutella warned of the risks of a single-model monopoly, and a deepfake video controversy involving a Meta executive highlights platform moderation pressure. Overall, model capability, agentic products, and safety governance are accelerating and intertwining.
